- 5. The Chairman opened the meeting by recalling that the Director had given a similar world roundup briefing to the Committee early in the session, and he felt that another such briefing would be useful as the session drew to an end. He remarked that because of pressing matters on the floor there might be interruptions, and he would like the Director to cover his material as quickly as possible.
- 6. The Director proceeded to cover material from his prepared text (on file in OLC) dealing with Soviet strategic forces, Chinese military developments, Sino/Soviet relations, Middle East, India/Pakistan, Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Thailand, and (in response to a question) the Chinese political situation.
- 7. Following the Director's prepared remarks, the Chairman commented that he had an understanding with the Director that any member could, at any time, call on the Director for a private briefing on situations in various parts of the world.
- 8. In response to questions from the Chairman, the Director then commented on the recent demonstrations in Okinawa and the strength and effectiveness of the South Vietnamese armed forces. The Chairman also inquired about recent events in Thailand, to which the Director responded that the same leaders were now in control and no changes in Thai foreign policy were expected.

- The Chairman then commented that he would have to leave for the floor, but before doing so wished to make a statement and had hoped Senator Symington would be present since he and Symington had discussed the matter which he wished to comment on. He referred to the White House announcement regarding the intelligence community and called attention to the National Security Act of 1947. He noted that the Director had, in accordance with his responsibilities under this Act, always "worn two hats" -- one as Director of the Central Intelligence Agency and the other as Chairman of the U.S. Intelligence Board, in which capacity he had coordinated the work of the other U.S. intelligence agencies. He said the Committee had approved Mr. Helms as the Director -- not anyone else--on the assumption that he would be in full charge of the CIA, subject only to the authority of the President. At this point Senator Symington returned to the room and the Chairman repeated his above points, adding that the Committee planned a full review of the intelligence community. He said he felt that the new arrangements announced in the White House release should be spelled out in an Executive Order. He added that he had not been consulted in advance regarding the "new plan" and that Senator Smith, the Ranking Minority Member, could speak for herself as to whether she had been consulted in advance. He added that he wished members of the Committee had been consulted.
- 12. The Chairman then asked the Director "to what extent, if any, does the new plan change your direction of CIA?" The Director responded "not at all" adding that he still had the same desk, same responsibilities and planned to carry on work in the same way. He said he could not abrogate these responsibilities and that the new arrangements actually consisted of only two points affecting his work: he had been asked to devote closer attention to the affairs of the intelligence community, and he had been given one specific new duty--that of preparing a consolidated intelligence program budget for the community. He added that he had not been consulted in advance about the new plan, but he had been asked his views on a proposal that the chief of the intelligence community sit in the White House, separated from any of the working agencies. He said he strongly opposed this, arguing that in such a position the chief would "have no troops," be just another member of the White House staff, and be unable to argue issues with the various intelligence agencies on their merits since the agencies would have all the facts and expertise. Senator Symington commented that he
